A free press and a free democracy (A) are two very important (B) cornerstones of a judiciary (C). Together, they are responsible for ensuring (D) transparency and holding those in power accountable (E) for their policies and actions. Although their actual functions are different, both institutions act as checks and balances for the government and, therefore, their roles are complementary. It is _____ (F) news and facts that will shape public opinion and allow the citizens of a country to exercise their rights. The judiciary's role is to protect those rights. Therefore, it becomes clear that in order to function efficiently, both the media and the judiciary must be independent of any outside influences that may attempt to skew (G) information or legal decisions.

However, the roles of these two institutions do not end here. The judiciary is also responsible for protecting the freedom of the press. At the same time, the press was (A) responsible for reporting facts and events in (B) a manner that helps the judiciary make (C) impartial legal decisions that can affect the course of a nation (D). (H)
