Diwali is one of the main festivals of Hindus. The preparation for Diwali celebration begins weeks before the festival. People begin with the preparations by cleaning their houses and shops. Every nook and corner of the houses, shops and offices is cleaned before Diwali. These are then decorated with lights, lamps, flowers and other decorative items.

On the day of Diwali, people light up their houses with diyas, candles and lights. They also make rangoli and decorate their houses with flowers. The ritual of worshipping Goddess Lakshmi and Ganesha is followed in every Hindu household on the occasion of Diwali. It is said that this brings in prosperity and good luck.

Also known as the festival of lights, Diwali is all about worshipping the deities, burning crackers, having sweets and making merry with the loved ones. It is considered to be one of the most auspicious days in the Hindu calendar.

(Most people are not ready to indulge in outdoor activities these days. They are mostly busy watching TV, surfing the internet or engrossed in their mobile or computer.) Over the time, these sources of entertainment turn into serious addictions. One such addiction is the computer addiction. Many people around the world are known to be addicted to their computer screens. They spend several hours a day in front their computer screens and even the thought of leaving it makes them feel restless. ✓

<https://t.me/srayaenglish>

Computer addicts are as vulnerable as drug addicts. Just as drug addicts aren't able to get rid of their habit of using drug computer addicts are not able to leave their computer. They gain pleasure by its use. It takes them into a state of euphoria. It is quite similar to the effect rendered by different drugs. Both computer addicts and drug addicts display compulsive behavior. They begin to isolate socially. They ignore their parents, children, spouse and friends, miss social events and avoid real interactions. They love staying hooked to their respective addictions. It is the only thing that makes them happy.

Euphoria = a state of intense happiness and self-confidence

However, the happiness rendered by both these addictions is temporary. Soon, these addicts begin to experience the negative impact of these addictions. They feel lonely and depressed. Their performance dips and they are unable to focus on anything. They also grow weak physically and are at a risk of incurring serious illnesses. Their mental health deteriorates. They become forgetful, restless and often develop anxiety issues. Many of them go into depression. It has also been observed that computer addicts are at a greater risk of developing drug and alcohol addiction. When someone suffers from both the conditions, it is referred to as dual diagnosis.
